Currency draws on personal experiences of rejection, struggle and perseverance. His music speaks to the determination to keep moving when support is scarce, and to listeners who have felt underestimated but continue to believe in their future.

His forthcoming debut EP, BAD DAYS ARE GONE, brings that journey together across five tracks. Exploring pain, ambition, hope and personal growth, the project reflects on the days he survived and the person he is becoming.

THE STORY

Currency, whose real name is Abuchi Nomeh Benjamin, is a Nigerian hip-hop and trap artist based in Onitsha, Anambra State, with roots in Ebonyi State. His music draws on personal experiences of struggle and self-belief.

At the heart of his story is the experience of being underestimated. Through periods of loneliness and disappointment, he found lessons in patience, survival and perseverance. These experiences shape the themes of ambition and growth in his music.

His debut EP, BAD DAYS ARE GONE, is set for release on 30 October 2026. Across five songs, with collaborators including Rord Kelly, Currency reflects on pain, hunger and hope. The project speaks to those building a future despite rejection and uncertainty.
